Whatever else the Paris rioting proves, or does not prove, it proves the mischief Suppose Jameson had of secret trials. been tried in England, as Dreyfus was in France, behind closed doors, and none of the evidence, only the verdict, given out? We might have seen in London such nervous excitement, fed on wild rumor, as Paris has been suffering from for the past week. The secrecy of the original Dreyfus trial was bad, and the semi-secrecy of the Esterhazy trial was The public was permitted to know only of the evidence that looked black for Major Esterhazy, but the evidence on the strength of which he was acquitted, and the guilt of Dreyfus practically reaffirmed, was kept secret. is clear, however, that the case turns very largely on a question of handwriting, and the chances for deception in this are notoriously great. It must be said inferences of the that some of the French tribunal on this subject were uncommonly like the reasoning in the famous trial of the Knave of Hearts in It will be re-'Alice in Wonderland.' membered that there, too, a letter, containing a set of verses, was the chief thing:

'Are they in the prisoner's handwriting?' asked another of the jurymen.

No, they're not,' said the White Rabbit, 'and that's the queerest thing about it.' (The jury all looked puzzled.)

'He must have imitated somebody else's (The jury all hand,' said the King.

brightened up again.)

'Please your Majesty,' said the Knave, 'I didn't write it, and they can't prove I did; there's no name signed at the end.'

'If you didn't sign it,' said the King, 'that only makes the matter worse. You must have meant some mischief, or else you'd have signed your name like an honest man.'

There was a general clapping of hands at this; it was the first really clever thing the King had said that day.

'That "proves" his guilt,' said the Queen.

the rest of the winter, the ice-bridge here again started to move with the rising tide, and a number of people who were crossing between Quebec and Levis at the time, had considerable difficulty in getting safely to shore. This morning the river in front of the city is clear, but with the ebb the mass of floating ice will again come down to block the harbor, as the key still holds good.

Mr. J. H. R. Burroughs, who has just been retired on pension from the Prothonotaryship of the Superior Court here, had filled the office for thirty-six years.

Ald. Langlois, of Sherbrooke, was wedded here yesterday, to Mrs. (widow), Jo-News has been received that a farmer named Lemay, at St. Eustache, Lotbiniere, was burned to death some days ago.

BLIZZARD AT TORONTO.

THE STORM RAGED FURIOUSLY FOR SEVERAL HOURS.

Toronto, Jan. 26.—The weather man at the Observatory assured a reporter at an early hour this morning that only five inches of snow had fallen during the progress of the storm that visited the city last night. Some people who were out in it may think it was nearer five The storm had been brewing for some time, and as early as Sunday night the weather bulletins stated that it was coming. It raged over the south-western states all day yesterday, blocking traffic considerably. Toronto got the first taste of it about seven o'clock, and for five or six hours a veritable blizzard had things very much its own way. The street railway car service was badly handicapped for a while, but the nine big sweepers were set to work and no actual blockades occurred, olthough the service was badly disorganized all even-The sweeners were at
