To M. Zola. 20th Sept^r 99
Dear Sir. GB

The last note I sent you (for which I must apologize as also for this) was written under the influence of great distress caused me by the iniquitous verdict of the Rennes' Court Martial; for which reason I trust you will forgive both its form and the bitter thoughts against your country which it expressed.

I have for many years been a careful reader of your books which I admire greatly, and I believe, in common with most of my countrymen, it was the fine stand made by you on behalf of the martyred Captain which led me to take so deep an interest in the case.

Although your work is in some ways unlike that of our own great novelist Charles Dickens you have one or two characteristics in common. You both put real work into your books. They are not the idle fancies of idle men but the result of laboured determination to get at and to depict the truth. While Dickens possessed a vein of broad humour well appreciated by our people, you have a remarkable facility in depicting masses of men in movement. You have both achieved immortality - for as long as the two languages are spoken on earth Zola and Dickens will be read.

By the way that curious Mr. Jules de Beauparc has the exact appearance of a half hitted character in one of Dickens' novels, as portrayed by the illustrator. I refer to "Mr. Dick" in "David Copperfield".

With regard to those Generals public opinion has — Put in every honest hand a whip.
To lash the scoundrels naked Through the world."

Mr Robert Blatchford the editor of the "Clarion" and a great admirer of your work says that "men who wear dark trousers (as the Generals) are capable of anything."

I am simply a working man but I feel justified in saying that you have endeared yourself to the English nation by your noble conduct. As a long time admirer of yours I have been proud of you. and as a Socialist I am more than proud of my comrades the Socialists of France.
Some time ago an American wrote a book depicting a Society the members of which undertook never to lie or to commit a dishonourable action. Such a Society is needed now. an International Freemasonry the members of which should undertake never to utter a falsehood or to do an unjust thing. The old ideals of Christianity are dying out. a new ideal is need to keep mankind from the moral rot which alas! too prevalent. Honourable men, it is true, will always be honourable, but flesh is weak and no man's rectitude is in any the worse for some support and stimulation. An International League of Honour with your self, Mr Labori and Col Piganiel as presidents would at this moment be an unequalled success in the English speaking world and would do immense good.

Yrs respectfully,
Geo t Mack

P.S. I know that in compiling your books you are glad of all the information you can obtain. If at any time I can supply you with any I shall be most happy to do so. A letter or post card addressed.

will always find me. If people in France say the demonstration here against the verdict at Rennes was owing only to newspaper agitation you may safely contradict them. Not if our army or navy had suffered defeat could there have been more widespread sorrow and distress among all classes. I saw strong men who could hardly speak from emotion. Men sat down and could do no more work, some drank glass after glass of strong spirits in silence. others cursed the Generals and judges in unmeasured terms. I heard a German sobbing and another trying to comfort him. "Never mind" he said "The Truth must come." Others said "What a terrible blow for M. Zola!"

What crimes have not been committed in the name of the Papacy! I am not a Protestant. I am an Agnostic, but I was reared a Protestant and I am very glad those of that faith in France have acted so well in this matter. If there had been no St Bartholemew massacre or, no revocation of the Edict of Nantes, no dragonnades, no siege of Rochelle how different might France have been today? But deprived of so much noble blood how impoverished she is! We sometimes cabil at the Puritanism of our people, but give us that and clearness rather than the siftings literature of the Boule vendus and the demoralization of the General Staff. 9EM.
