of mercy, and to live in constant admiiring and adoring of divine goodness; this brought him to a very acquaintance with his this made him more pious and active; this brought him to walk humbly with God, this made him speak more often about his spirituality and experientially to often of the things of God; and in a word this left a sweet burden upon his spirit, because he every night must tell his account; and if his sheet should meet his winding-sheet, it had been all one: he was but for the record of his work was done; so that not off. ~~With~~ could not injure him.
