cert. in paper of Jan. John 1158-35

" He did write down every evening what the frame of his spirit had been all day long, especially in every duty. He took notice what it comes and what he received in his spiritual life; what return from that far country; what answers of prayer, what steadfastness and faith; and what observable manifestations did present themselves, and the substance of what he had been doing; and any workings of thoughts, inordinacy in any passion...

This made him to retain a grateful remembrance of mercy, and to live in a constant admiri-ring and adoring of divine goodness; this brought him to a very acquaintance with his own heart; this kept his spirit low and fitted him for perfect communication from God; this made him more purely and sober; this helped him to walk humbly with God, this made him speak more affectionately and experientially to others of the things of God; and in a word this left a sweet calm upon his spirit, because he every night made out his account; and if his sheet should prove his winding-sheet, it had been all one: for he could say his work was done; so that death could not surprise him.
