CITIES CENSUS COMMITTEE. POPULATION OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, 1890-1930. Compiled and edited by Walter Laidlaw.

This statistical sourcebook contains detailed tables from New York City, twenty-mile and fifty-mile regions and six national areas. Although the focus is on the population of New York City between 1890 and 1930, the tables extend back to the Federal Census of 1790 and include data from all Federal Censuses up to 1930 as well as New York State Censuses between 1855 and 1925. Material is presented under six general sections: the city, its region and the nation; population changes in census tracts, 1905-1930; the breakup of congestion, 1905-1930; the nativity and color of the city's population, 1890-1930; the religious composition of the city's population, 1855-1930.

⊛ JOHN R. COMMONS. RACES AND IMMIGRANTS IN AMERICA.

This volume, first published in 1907, is particularly important for understanding the attitude of organized labor toward American immigration policy. Commons discusses the issues of race and democracy, colonial race elements, the Negro, nineteenth century addictions, the relationship of urban life to crime and poverty, and amalgamation and assimilation.

⊛ FLORENCE E. JANSON. THE BACKGROUND OF SWEDISH IMMIGRATION 1840-1930.

Based on authoritative sources in Sweden and the United States, Janson's study remains the standard account of the social and economic conditions in Sweden which prompted mass immigration to this country in the last century. The book examines the pioneer generation of the 1840's as well as the religious conflicts and economic crises generated by later waves of immigrants.

⊛ STANLEY C. JOHNSON. HISTORY OF THE EMIGRATION FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM TO NORTH AMERICA 1763-1912.

This study begins with an examination of official policy toward emigration from the United Kingdom. It includes statistics on the income of workers and farmers, and the economic causes of migration as well as a description of efforts at assisted migration. The author proceeds to describe restrictions on immigration in the U.S. and Canada, outlines the principal destinations of the immigrants and discusses land opportunities and colonization schemes. There are special chapters on the emigration of women and children, a chapter on the social and economic impact of migrations, and a concluding chapter on the problems of immigration as seen in 1913.

"The best account of the whole subject . . . contains an exhaustive bibliography."

OLE MUNCH RAEDER. AMERICA IN THE FORTIES. The Letters of Ole Munch Raeder, Translated and Edited by Gunnar J. Malmin.

Ole Munch Raeder was a Norwegian lawyer, and in preparing a massive report on the jury system in Britain and America, he spent over a year in the United States, much of it in the frontier settlements of Norwegian immigrants in Wisconsin. His letters home are here collected from their original newspaper publication or from unpublished manuscripts.

"His report on the frontier Norwegians, their situation as compared with what it had been at home, and their relations with their American neighbors, supply the central interest of a special type of traveler's narrative." Guide to The Study of the United States of America (1960, Library of Congress), #4347-48

EDWARD YOUNG. SPECIAL REPORT ON IMMIGRATION. Accompanying Information for Immigrants.

"There is abundant evidence that in these years immigration was ardently desired. This document . . . contained information for immigrants relative to prices and rentals of land, staple products, facilities for market and kinds of labor in demand. There are tables showing the average weekly wages paid in several states and sections, the cost of provisions and dry goods, and house rents in manufacturing districts in 1869-70. Several thousand copies of this report were distributed in Europe (translated into German, French and Scandinavian). . . . Consuls reported that the document had great influence."
