Jonas Hanway
The object of relief
1775

341

Lieutenant the mission

" Whether we build prisons in order to restore the morality and religion of people or churches in which they are to worship God, the object is the same: and to all appearance, the repentance and amendment the sorrow of the past, and the resolution with regard to the future mode of life, will be more sincere in the mission than in the church."

r 221.

" The prisoner will not only daily feel his mediator for his sinners' sufferance, but likewise the messenger from heaven in the person of the clergyman who is also to attend him daily and assist him in arranging his thoughts giving rest to his soul, and filling him with notes of joyful days, provided he will seek for them by the only means they are to be found; the intention being to bring ~~him~~ him to a right view of his condition, and from an enemy BnF MSS to convert him to a friend of social life.* If we mean to conform to the christian law, and make our policy and religion harmonize what plan can be more consistent."

r 222.

"The consideration of his immortal soul, under the striking hand of Heaven and the brow of solitude, will open his mind.*
He will feel his situation as an intermediate state between both worlds, and as a preparation for either."

r 223.
