r xii "The great object of my speculation is a means of accomplishing the immortal enterprise proposed, is ~~the~~ building more missions. They are wanted in almost every part of kingdom."

r xii "It seems to be universally acknowledged that the safest way to rescue a prisoner from being infected by the poisoned breath of companions is wickedness, and to drag him from his evil courses, is to deprive him of all possibility of evil communication. Let us try then what can be done; what we are morally certain will be done, by the human rigor of solitary imprisonment and labour, as a punishment fit to restore delinquents to creditable and useful life. BnF MSS Let us convince the world that we believe man is a free agent: let us prove that the will is the substance of his freedom, — and that this depends, in a great measure, on the object which the accidents of his life throw in his way?"
