La guerre et le Welfare.

138

La guerre a beaucoup aidé le Welfare Il en a été de Welfare et aide aux démunis a été de Welfare appliqué à la nation et au monde.

"The more the state engaged in the war...
Damage to homes and injuries to persons were not less likely among the rich than the poor ... the assistance provided by the Government to counter the hazards of war carried little social discrimination and was offered to the group ~~in~~ in the ~~community~~ community."

The pooling of national resources and the sharing of risks were not always practicable nor always applied; but they were the guiding principles."

Extrait de D.C. Marsh.

The welfare state

p. 12.

Marsh also writes that:

"The war undoubtedly forced on us the realisation that a nation consists of living people all dependent on each other, and that to show the world the of society

the long cherished assumption concerning the superiority of some people compared with others, and the stretching of rights to the few and not to the many, were in danger the very crux of our society were at stake."

... many of the people who were at the now many of the people who were at the now the world is not the same as it was

... the world is not the same as it was
the world is not the same as it was
the world is not the same as it was

the world is not the same as it was
the world is not the same as it was
