Dear Mr. Deane

I am expecting every day to hear from you - but in the mean while the account of your conversion at Haverhill has come to excite both curiosity & anxiety. I suppose the report given in the Times of the 2nd as from its Paris correspondents, may not be quite quite accurate ~~but~~ I saw many of the young people knowing the news before the old King's death to be live, that he himself & M. de Tremours were ^{almost} legitimists, but that all the rest were regentists - unless the Pr. de Joinville might have some ambition for himself. You will recollect the printed scrap I sent you of the King's last conversation with me.

But I do not see how the

we know the issue of ~~the~~ ^{your} conversation, whether reported with accuracy or only approximating to the truth, can affect the first great question, the Presidential election.

I fear that the Magnifico Principis rembrus may be powerful enough to overcome the obvious illegality & that the Electors themselves may make the coup d'etat. The rank of the other parties is of a candidate supremely known. An idea for supplying that rank

& tho' it be a great temeri-it to you: What do you think of Marshall Soult; for him every party might vote without discredit - his name is still (I suppose) popular & well known.

& it would ^{look like} ~~be~~ an imitation of General Washington - the only danger I see is his great age & that he might die & then Basna might be acquiescent without illigality. Love yours
