3 Port Street
Belgrave Square.

Jan 7. 29.

2/ I should hardly venture to trouble you again, dear Sir — though there is not a day in which I do not try to say God preserve & sustain you — but I have a petition to present. And now, perhaps my excuse
is worse than none.

But you shall hear, &
you will forgive me.

When I lived in your city of Berlogne my only friends were my poor
neighbours on the port,
the mitelote population,

pilots, fishermen & their wives. I was admitted into all their fiets de famille, & into all their sorrows, &
it is enough to say that I found in them admirable qualities & in their cordial attachment, compensation for what we call civilized society.

I have just received a touching proof that ^{within} years of absence, even all the bad efforts of bad or wicked men, to make us believe we are born to hate & to injure each other, can efface from the heart of one woman the memory of the tears

another had her & for her
the most unhelp
of wine & more
recalled her old
in England:

you saw
after had an Boslyne by who
out of a boat
it perished. The
belonged to a man Delpierre (but a Caton) the royal
pilots - a man of 60 (I think). In
his many years
in consequence of
broken his leg
performance of

men & their
admitted into
a family,
toorrow, &
to say that their admirable
in their cordial
of your sensations
are 'all civilized

have just received
within
that your son all the
had or with
like in believe
to late & to
can offer
of one woman
of the tears

another had shed on her & for her. One of the most unhappy & foolish of wives & mothers has recalled her old friend
in England:

You saw the account
of the sad accident at Boulogne by which I passed out of a boat's crew of 11 perished. The boat
belonged to a man named Delpierre (but always called Cator) the dozen of the pilots - a man upwards of 60 (I think). Picou for his many services, had
in consequence of having broken his leg in the performance of his duty

brave - quiet, sober
good natured - an excellent husband & father. Even when I was there (in - 35)
he was almost worn
out in the service & at his earnest request I had the impertinence to add my poor solicitation to Mr. Coutin to try to get him a Débit de tabac
as a récompense.

What poor fellow he
has found rest in the element he had known so long. He & his son, a fine brave handsome boy of nineteen, perished together
