I hope you are in Paris. I shall be glad to think of you with the spade in your hand in the garden, or engaged in the seraphim of Platonius, in the evening. The intervals I permit you to employ on history: how happy you would be in the midst of pale throated children.

Handwritten scribbles and circular stamps.

All here are as usual. The little Assurine climbs the hill with more visible rapidity than we could it. The creature has started with a lot of papers to his front it is very charming. The paper is sent to the side for. We no more can thank of some but the subject of the accident to be N. P. de Wallen
