My dear Sir & Friend I have followed you to this anti-slavery cause, of my father.
I have been in the middle of September I have caused a delay, I don't think of it for a moment that you should have been able to say to think me reg.
I am only regret of yours.
I am full of your opinion about precautions etc that you have taken for our dear brother. They are greatly improved, exactly in proportion to their importance, & prevent evil only by anticipating its approaches. A southern slaveholder & his wife in this state of the world & her husband, that you have every reason to trust to it I am as to books. You have all applied to one very learned in the matter. But that I expect to soon know, or to be too wise or too good for them - but somehow they do not often come in my way, & I am not

I send you this last by Scrowl & these few indications that you may not think me inattentive. With you shall have a much more full report - as soon as I get.
I hope you will be in a few days.
I shall apply to you or two this rough novel readers, & women of good taste, for my little Paul does must not put in delicate hand to anything dubious in any way.

With kindest regards, Emily Weston has written, they are all well & as happy as you, health good, sister & kind affection can be kept. They have all been very kind to me here.

When shall I see you, my most dear & beloved friend? That is the point I never lose sight of, as the thing to which my returning thoughts is to be applied.

I had determined before your letter came that Oct. should not pass (tho' the 3d did) without some expression of my warmest & most sincere wishes for the endurance of your happiness - for your health & for all that you yourself pray for. Believe
