Thank you for the charming memory of Lady Rachel Ashurst, dearest Monsieur Guizot.

That is a subject which you can treat: how few men can! They are eloquent enough on the attractions of the forbidden the unlicensed. They hardly believe in the union of passion with duty. This is as stupid as it is vicious. For how is the heart of a corrupt & faithless woman to contain that ex-haustless well of tenderness which lay sup & untroubled in Lady Rachel's.

In reading it I pleased myself with thinking that you have this most heavenly of all earthly spectacles always before you, & that you wrote with the more emotion & fervour because you had two loving young voices by your side.

M. de Lubereque tells me that you look remarkably well, & calls upon me to find that merit in the resolution of H.D. If any thing could bring it into favour with me, that would. But I would rather have had you preserve hope, for all that. All that we see, & all that we suffer - the pretensions of Nicholas, the hesitations of Austria, the alarms of Prussia, & last but not least, our own 'sotte attitude vis-à-vis of France' (of France herself I say nothing) all these are fruits of H.D.

I send this scrap by your neighbour M. de Bourke who promises to bring his band to see us. He worthy P. Milne too is coming. He speaks with modest exultation of your civilities to him at the Académie. I have a little brochure for you by the first 'occasion' a very humble affair, but you will find in it a little bit of non-conformist history.

Monsieur

M. Guizot,
