Weybridge 22nd Feb 4

Mr. St. Hilain, who arrived yesterday, tells us that my most dear & honoured friend, Monin Guizot, is surprised at my silence on a subject which regards him so nearly. This makes me very unhappy, & I know not what excuse to make for my seeming neglect. I am sure nobody takes a deeper interest in all that concerns you than I do, & your children are extremely dear & interesting to me. You must then but this as a proof of my independence - but you will say, I read your paper with attention, & I shall be all around them soon, but I sit down in thought. Fall into the uninterrupted channel & be patient, but ^{people} say that I have outlived my life - which every hour I feel more intensely.

I don't fail to send you the congratulations of so and so - but they are not sincere - perhaps not so - how true that the great William must suffer them, such as they are - to be can speak to him with a strong conviction of the value & blessedness of the ^{engagement} ~~tie~~ he is about to contract. I, who am at the end, may speak with confidence to those who are at the beginning, & I speak not only for myself - for my beloved husband, the whole value of life, consists in this - in our strict & intire union. It is because I know that he felt it so, that I am resigned to death and separation, rather than that he should

"He has no time for me to shed, When I am at rest."

I hear that William's prospects of happiness are as bright as I, or as you, can wish them. You are his main business. May your new daughter be equal to the sons you chose for yourself! My daughter is still at Fontenay - she is much better, but I am still anxious & I shall go to her if the weather much longer, but that is doubtful. The children are well. St Helene would do me good by forcing me to think of things which occupied so much of my dear husband's thoughts. They are indeed serious enough.

Forgive me dear Monsieur Guizot & accept the best wishes my heart can form for you & your dear children.
Yours affec^tly - M^{lle}
