On March 6, 2003, the Minister of Research and New Technologies, Claude Allègre, the Minister for Gender Parity and Equal Job Opportunity, Nicole Bricq, and the Director General of the CNRS, Germaine Dreyer signed a framework agreement committing them to cooperate to improve the status of women in science. At the moment I took up duties at the head of the CNRS I made a point of becoming familiar with this agreement, and I intend fully to promote its objectives and to place them at the center of plans for strategic action. The principle of equality between men and women in scientific recruiting and in scientific careers is a democratic imperative, and moreover I am convinced that it constitutes a key factor in the development of the CNRS. The present work embodies the CNRS ideal of men and women sharing knowledge.

A special word of gratitude is due to the Committee for the History of the CNRS as well as to the authors of this excellent study for the quality of their labor. The text is an admirable contribution to the advancement of women in science.

Bernard Lemaître
Director General of the CNRS
