TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE.

ancient rival,—not in the spirit of perpetuated discord, but in that of united admiration for the high minds and honest actions which have made even such discussions glorious to human nature, and useful to mankind.

I am but too well aware that the work of translation usually robs a composition of the edge and polish of its style; and I cannot hope to have preserved the original merit of so eloquent and finished a performance: but this copy has had the rare advantage of being retouched by the hand of the author, who has condescended to revise it; and whilst I acknowledge Monsieur Guizot's kindness with becoming
