Description Manuscrit

Transcription

Transcription furnished with big wedding coffers and chairs that looked as if they came out of some Vandyck portrait. What was in my mind was the strong impression that all this was natural, spontaneous, that it had about it nothing of the picturesqueness which swell studios have taught to rich and aesthetic houses. Mr.

Oke evidently misunderstood me.

"It is a ~~good~~ ^nice^ old place," he said, "but it's too large for us. You see, my wife's health does not allow of our having many guests; and ~~we have~~ ~~xxx~~ there are no children." I ~~xxx~~

I thought I noticed a vague complaint in his voice; and he evidently was afraid there might have seemed something of the kind, for he added immediately -

"I don't ~~xxx~~ care for children one jackstraw, you know, myself; can't understand ~~for my part, why~~ how any one can, for my part."

If a man went out of his way to tell a lie, I ~~xxx~~ said to myself, Mr. Oke of Okehurst was doing so at the present moment.
